

8, The Destiny of China

Why append such a brief section at the absolute conclusion? In truth, I initially harbored no desire to append it, because I maintain that not only is there fundamentally nothing left to articulate regarding this topic, but touching upon it invariably inflicts profound sorrow upon me.

The precise reason I still insist on appending this subsection is that I wish to demonstrate that I have fundamentally never forgotten exactly why I embarked upon such a protracted and solitary journey. Even concerning the initial objective, the answer I have witnessed constitutes an unadulterated, absolute tragedy; yet I will nevertheless resolutely confront these factual realities that I have laid bare.

Regarding the question of "exactly how did China devolve into this current state," I believe I have already delivered a highly adequate answer, and I harbor zero desire to reiterate here those conclusions that induce tears upon merely hearing them. However, regarding the question of "what exactly should China do next," I genuinely am currently incapable of offering any answer whatsoever.

On one hand, I must concede that my own knowledge is not that vast; my comprehension regarding multitudinous modern social science disciplines, particularly economics, remains exceedingly sparse, exclusively reliant upon certain popularized science texts translated domestically. My knowledge concerning the exact social state of the contemporary cohort of the world's most developed nations is even more limited.

Domestic news reports in China are naturally saturated with prejudice, yet I identically do not believe the news reporting of any specific nation can achieve absolute, unadulterated objective neutrality. However, under the existence of the internet firewall, attempting to directly comprehend the external world obviously entails a relatively steep cost. After all, I still have my academic studies to complete, so it is fundamentally impossible for me to perpetually "go out" (circumvent the firewall) every single day to monitor the situation on the global internet.

On the other hand, I identically wish to assert that China's societal development has deteriorated to such a horrific extent that it is virtually impossible to even utilize the idiom "too entrenched to be reversed" (积重难返) to describe it anymore; this is a nation that is utterly, terminally ill (病入膏肓). Chinese society today is so phenomenally grotesque that human beings themselves are being domesticated exactly like animals, forfeiting their fundamental characteristics as the human species. Exactly how is one supposed to salvage such a colossal and pathological society?

After one thousand four hundred years, does China still possess any possibility whatsoever of catching up head-on? Rewinding 1400 years from the annihilation of ancient Egypt's final dynasty, the ancient Egyptian civilization was still residing at the absolute zenith of the 18th Dynasty; yet today, people can solely rely upon museums and ruins to pay their respects to it.

Although it is ruthlessly cruel, I must point out that throughout the entirety of human history—unless it is during transitional epochs such as The Great Expansion (大扩张) and feudalization (封建化)—people fundamentally never witness a society situated in a more backward state within the historical sequence (历史序列) suddenly rising abruptly to overtake an advanced society. This is to say nothing of the fact that China has completely derailed from the normal trajectory of development, arriving at a societal morphology that even I fundamentally do not know exactly how to taxonomize.

A friend once remarked to me that fundamentally no vocabulary within contemporary sociology is sufficient to describe a state like China's; conversely, a hypothesis from cosmology—the "Heat death of the universe" (热寂)—is phenomenally apropos.

He is absolutely correct. The restoration-bureaucratic society (复辟官僚社会), having developed to its current stage, is undeniably a state of "eternal and unshakable stasis."

If anyone still desires to salvage China under these circumstances, they must possess the courage and willpower to execute a resolution unprecedented in human history: namely, the absolute, total negation of the past fourteen centuries of Chinese history, unequivocally declaring without the slightest hesitation that the restoration-bureaucratic system (复辟官僚制度) constitutes a dead end that thrust the nation toward annihilation.

With state affairs having deteriorated to this current extremity, the entire nation must undergo a complete purging of its marrow and cleansing of its flesh (洗髓伐毛) before it can possibly achieve a nirvanic rebirth (涅槃重生).

Yet even if a hero capable of making such an agonizingly difficult decision existed, exactly how could he persuade the Chinese populace to hurl themselves alongside him into the monumental enterprise of national self-salvation?

Readers can observe that although my words spare zero mercy for the Chinese empire, and I conceal absolutely nothing regarding such a phenomenally reactionary political system, I have, after all, read multitudinous books. I comprehend China's history from antiquity to the present vastly more profoundly than the overwhelming majority of people; to assert that I harbor zero emotional attachment to China's scant exceptional—or at least neutral—culture would be impossible.

But regarding the vast majority of ordinary commoners, upon exactly what basis should they salvage the nation once more? Exactly how many times have they been deceived, how many times have they been exploited, how many times have they been abandoned? I fear the count is incalculable.

The vast majority of the populace exclusively pursues the happiness of themselves and their families; those characteristics evolved over the protracted duration of the civilization are genuinely not a necessity for them. Upon what basis should the populace risk fundamentally unknowable perils to salvage a civilization entirely devoid of credibility?

Fundamentally no locale in the world has ever spawned such an egregiously malevolent societal morphology; for those Westerners, they would not even dare to envision Hell itself in such a manner! So why even salvage it? No one can provide a rational explanation; attempting to persuade everyone has already become phenomenally arduous.

Therefore, my perspective is this: discard all rhetoric of "salvaging the nation" (救国); merely pursuing "salvaging the people" (救民) is thoroughly sufficient.

Sever the ties with the past even more radically and absolutely!

The Chinese people ought to utterly discard this "humanless civilization" (没有人的文明). When the rights of the populace can finally receive protection, and the entire society no longer resides in perpetual, day-and-night terror, the Chinese people will naturally forge a nascent civilization. Only by pursuing an absolute, ground-up demolition and reconstruction does the entire nation possess any genuine hope of rebuilding. Perhaps only by pushing it to such an extreme extremity can adversity mutate into prosperity, enabling a brand-new China—one that has severed all ties with its old history with a single stroke of the blade—to step onto the global stage possessing the identity of a respected nation.

For overseas Chinese diaspora and our compatriots in Taiwan, I genuinely hope they can possess a lucid mind to formulate accurate judgments.

I must concede that the Chinese people indeed love their homeland; yet, despite being deceived and traumatized so many times, there are invariably countless Chinese who heed the language of demons and plummet into the trap.

Now that I comprehend China's past, I identically understand that no one can possess any righteous justification whatsoever to demand that overseas Chinese love Chinese culture. They ought to have made this decision long ago: whether to completely forsake their identity as Chinese and thoroughly assimilate into local societies, or to resolutely retain their characteristics as Chinese and live on. The first choice is beyond reproach; human beings are born with the inherent right to pursue an ideal life under the premise of not inflicting harm upon others.

If they genuinely intend to make the second choice, I believe they must possess the resilience of the Jewish people in antiquity—acting strictly as if they fundamentally no longer possess a motherland, and that the Chinese must identically endure a wandering existence lasting two millennia.

To unswervingly adhere to the Chinese language, folk beliefs, and life customs in such a manner, regardless of exactly how many epochs have elapsed, until the day the realm is finally restored to the light. If such an enterprise could genuinely succeed, then the legendary saga of the Chinese people would be fully comparable to that of the Jews.

My sole fear is that they are neither willing to completely abandon their Chinese characteristics, nor capable of relinquishing their unrealistic illusions regarding China; this will exclusively inflict harm upon themselves and their families.

If the world can eventually be restored to the righteous path, then I maintain that Taiwan, South Korea, Japan, and the United States are the paradigms that most desperately require reference.

The Taiwanese are indeed remarkable; today, they and we already constitute two diametrically distinct civilizations, and Taiwan's societal morphology as a developed region is unequivocally worthy of serving as a reference for China.

During the decades following their retreat to Taiwan, exactly what did the Kuomintang (国民党) do correctly to break the curse of the restoration-bureaucratic system (复辟官僚制度)? Exactly how was the land reform executed, and exactly how did democratization commence? Taiwan's successful experience possesses irreplaceable value for China.

Korea once fell under China's influence and embarked upon the trajectory of a restoration-bureaucratic state (复辟官僚国家); the wretched condition of the entire peninsula was indistinguishable from Qing Dynasty society.

Following the North-South partition, South Korea successfully transmuted an adverse geopolitical situation into a series of advantageous conditions; it was compelled to play a relatively pivotal role within the US-led international system, thereby reaping numerous economic conveniences and moving much closer to the Western world regarding its political system and ideology.

At the end of last year, when South Korean President Yoon Suk-yeol attempted to utilize the military to launch a "constitutional coup" (宪法政变), the military and the populace delivered a swift and resolute rejection. This is a highly remarkable feat; at the very least, it demonstrates that South Koreans know exactly what kind of life they ought to defend.

Under the premise of the protracted existence of the restoration-bureaucratic system, exactly what internal and external factors enabled South Korea to become a developed nation? This is the exact answer China requires.

Japan is exactly the idealized paradigm of what China ought to have looked like had it undergone normal feudalization (封建化). Exactly how much knowledge and culture did Japan once learn from China, subsequently elevating and flourishing them?

I fundamentally do not consider this inappropriate in the slightest; Chinese culture within the restoration-bureaucratic society (复辟官僚社会) either morphed into grotesque deformities or marched toward annihilation, and being inherited by a nation situated at a more advanced historical stage is currently a fortunate occurrence.

Japan indeed waged phenomenally brutal invasions against China, and I maintain that the Japanese ought identically to recognize that the war of aggression during their period of fascist rule constitutes a dishonorable detour for them as well. Having achieved such rapid and successful societal development on an archipelago separated from Europe by tens of thousands of miles, the Japanese ought to possess even more courage and confidence to calmly acknowledge their own errors.

This nation is unequivocally magnificent; from my perspective, if Japan did not exist in the world, then human society would lack its two most paramount "control groups" (对照组)—namely, China-Japan and Japan-Europe—and multitudinous truths would genuinely have been submerged beneath fallacies.

The Chinese ought to be capable of untangling exactly where they fall short and exactly what historical lessons they missed from Japan's history and reality; no other nation can elucidate the answer for China as lucidly as Japan.

The United States has been the undisputed premier global power and leader for the past 80 years, and will remain so in the foreseeable future. This is not to imply that the US itself is immune to decay, but rather that a nation capable of superseding the US has fundamentally not yet emerged. From my perspective, the US naturally does not need to view China as a threat challenging its leadership position, but this does not imply that China holds zero value for the US.

The factual reality is that the value China possesses might be even greater than Americans previously imagined.

In the 30-plus years following the Cold War, Americans attempted to universalize their political system and ideology, only to hit walls everywhere. The reason is precisely as I pointed out previously: every single locale in the world possesses its own unique socio-historical process, and this reality is phenomenally difficult to alter merely by draping it in the superficial veneer of modernization.

Admittedly, the entire world has universally benefited from the US-led global system, yet it appears that—with the possible exception of South Korea—fundamentally no nation has escaped its predetermined historical destiny.

That is to say, fundamentally not a single nation that failed to completely experience the feudalization process and an early modern society (近世社会) has become a developed nation; their societies are still fundamentally not genuine modern societies (现代社会).

In the past, Americans did not know how to prescribe medicine targeted at the specific symptoms, but now China's symptoms are phenomenally lucid; so, is there a possibility for further progression? Although China remains astronomically distant from modernization, any enterprise must inevitably be accomplished step by step. When medical professionals confront a disease, they identically must first comprehend its pathology before devising methods to treat and prevent it. Now that we have thoroughly mapped out precisely how this disease was formed and exactly how it inflicts harm, this constitutes a monumental stride toward the objective of curing the disease.

If the United States is genuinely willing to focus on China and assist China in escaping its terminal impasse (走出绝境), then this will constitute an honor never attained by any regime since antiquity, an epoch-making monumental enterprise. In the past, the Chinese said, "Bian Que cannot put flesh on white bones, and Jizi cannot salvage a doomed state" (扁鹊不能白骨肉, 箕子不能存危国); now, this proverb must also be amended, because not only can a doomed state be salvaged, but even a deceased nation can be resuscitated.

If in the past Americans spoke of their "Manifest Destiny" (天命昭昭) merely to prove to other nations that the mandate of heaven resided with them, now Americans can proudly assert that they have become capable of "mastering the mandate of heaven and utilizing it" (制天命而用); this will inaugurate a brand-new era.

The US would not only secure a formidable and loyal ally in East Asia, but its global leadership would endure for an unfathomable number of generations. If the US genuinely believes it ought to serve as the leader of the world, then it must act as the vanguard of humanity, manifesting the courage to dread no hardships whatsoever.

Exactly as President Kennedy articulated during his speech announcing the decision to go to the moon: We choose to go to the moon not because it is easy, but because it is hard.

These past few days, as I pushed this manuscript to its conclusion, two soundtracks from the 1986 Singaporean historical drama The Sword and the Song (《绝代双雄》) became quite popular online: one is the theme song of the same name, and the other is Tears of the Rivers and Mountains (《山河泪》), arranged using the lyrics of the poem Po Zhen Zi (《破阵子》) by Li Yu (李煜), the Last Ruler of Southern Tang.

Upon coming across them, I felt profoundly moved and kept them on loop for several consecutive days.

Speaking from my innermost heart, the segment of the entirety of Chinese history I cherish most is the ancient history of "dwelling in the vast lands of Yin" (宅殷土茫茫 / from the Classic of Poetry: Xuan Niao) because when reading ancient history, there is genuinely absolutely zero psychological burden; I am acutely aware that the historical events of that era exert virtually zero direct impact upon the present.

However, the history subsequent to the Qin (秦) unification evokes an entirely different sensation. Reading it perpetually conjures the sentiment of "Most tragic was the day of hasty farewell at the ancestral temple, when the royal academy still played the song of parting" (最是仓皇辞庙日，教坊犹奏别离歌), leaving one to only "Sigh as I look back in the bright moonlight" (叹回首月明中); it is unequivocally a relentless downward spiral into irreversible decay, how can it not induce profound agony.

Whether in the past or the present, an unknown multitude of people have shed tears for this nation, and an unknown multitude's blood and sweat have been completely squandered in vain.

Numerous cultures globally liken their motherland to a mother; if an individual is oblivious that their closest kin suffers from a terminal illness, that is perhaps forgivable.

Yet, if they comprehend the entire genesis and pathology of their kin's disease, and are profoundly aware that since antiquity fundamentally no one who contracted this disease has ever possessed a chance of survival, yet remain utterly powerless to cure it, how unimaginably agonizing must their heart be!

If readers can empathize even slightly with my tears of blood (泣血之情), they might perhaps marginally forgive the emotional outbursts I have manifested throughout my writing.

Yet even if the entire nation appears utterly devoid of hope, I will never forsake the expectation for the day when the realm is restored to the righteous path; because based upon my comprehension of human history, although human beings occasionally become foolish and muddled, we appeared in this world precisely for the purpose of creating miracles.

My personal life over the past decade has not been happy. Perhaps people will mock a mere student for contemplating so many monumental issues as an exercise in sheer futility, but such contemplation identically constitutes the absolute pillar of my existence.

Only when I can glean some insights from my contemplation do I feel my life possesses meaning; even if I am frequently belittled by my parents, I perpetually possess a reason to live on.

The hardships encountered during the research and writing process have been mentioned multitudinous times previously; regardless, I personally bear absolute responsibility for any errors, and I invite those who read this to critique it unsparingly utilizing factual realities and scientific methodologies.

This record is not a formal book, nor did I perceive it as a strictly academic work during the writing process; all historical documents and academic works possessing monumental value to this manuscript have already been explicitly cited directly within the respective contexts throughout the text, hence there is no dedicated bibliography.

Once again, I thank the multitudinous friends who have accompanied me over these past several years.

The time of completing this record is Beijing Time, March 16, 2025, at 23:33.

8, 中国的命运

为什么要在最后再加上这样一小节呢？其实我本来是不想加的，因为我认为这个话题不但已经没有什么好说的，而且谈到就会让我感到非常难过。之所以仍然要把这个小节加上，原因是我想表明我始终没有忘记自己为什么会踏上这么一段漫长和孤独的旅途。哪怕就最初的目标而言，我所看到的回答是彻头彻尾的悲剧，但我依然会坚定地面对这些被我揭示的事实。

对于“中国是怎么走到今天这一步”这个问题，我想我已经给出了很好的回答，我也不想在这里再重复闻着落泪的结论。但是对于“中国接下来应该怎么办”这个问题，我现在确实给不出任何回答。一方面我必须承认自己的知识没那么丰富，对于很多现代的社会科学知识，特别是经济学了解得很少，只是通过一些翻译入国内的科普读物。我对于现在全世界最发达的这一批国家的社会状态知道的就更有限了，中国国内的报道当然充满偏见，我也不信哪个国家的新闻报道能够做到完全的客观中立。可是在有互联网墙的情况下，想要直接了解外部世界显然会有一个比较高的成本，我毕竟还有学业要完成所以不可能天天“出去”关注国际互联网的情况。

另一方面我也想说说中国社会发展到这个地步，甚至已经很难再用“积重难返”这个词形容了，这是一个完全病入膏肓的国家。中国社会现在是如此的畸形，以至于连人本身都在被像动物一样驯化，丧失作为人类的基本特征。像这样的庞大且病态的社会去怎么拯救呢？一千四百年了，中国还具有任何迎头赶上的可能吗？从埃及最后一个王朝覆灭倒推 1400 年，古埃及文明还处于第 18 王朝的鼎盛时期，现在人们已经只能通过博物馆和遗迹来瞻仰它了。虽然很残酷，但是我必须指出的是，整个人类历史上除非是在大扩张和封建化这样的转变时期，人们基本上看不到在历史序列中处于更落后状态的社会突然崛起，赶超先进社会的事，更不用提中国已经完全脱离了正常发展的轨道，到了一个即使是我都不知道该如何分类的社会形态上。曾经有一个朋友对我说，现在任何社会学里的词汇都不足以描述中国这样的状态，反倒是宇宙学中的一个假设“热寂”（Heat death of the universe）十分合适。他说得没错，复辟官僚社会发展到今天这个阶段，的确是一种“永恒并且不可动摇的静止”。

如果任何人还想在这种形势下挽救中国，他必须有勇气和意志做出这样一个人类历史上前所未有的决断，那就是彻底否定过去十四个世纪的中国历史，毫不迟疑地宣布复辟官僚制度是一条把民族推向死亡的绝路。国事发展到今天这个地步，整个国家非得洗髓伐毛才可能涅槃重生。可是即使有英雄能够做出这样艰难的决定，他又怎么说服中国人民与之一道投入国家自救的事业中呢？读者也能看到我虽然嘴上对于中华帝国不留情，对于如此反动的政治体制也没有什么好讳言的。但是我毕竟看了那么多书，对于中国古往今来的历史比绝大多数人要了解得多，要说对于中国为数不多的优秀或者至少中立的文化没有感情是不可能的。但是对于大部分普通老百姓而言，他们凭什么再去救国呢？他们曾经被欺骗了多少次，被利用了多少次，被抛弃了多少次？恐怕数不清。大部分人民追求的只是自己和家庭的幸福，那些文明长期演化出的特征对于他们的确不是必要的，人民凭什么冒着根本不可知的风险去拯救一个毫无信誉的文明？世界上从来没有哪个地方出现过这般邪恶的社会形态，对于那些西方人来说，他们甚至连地狱都不敢这么想象！所以为什么还要救？没有人能给出一个合理性的解释，想要说服大家已经很难了。

因此我的看法是，不要说什么“救国”，只追求“救民”就够了。和以往切割得再彻底一点吧！中国人应该彻底抛弃“没有人的文明”，当人民的权利能够受到保护，整个社会不再日夜处于惊恐之中时，中国人会创造出新文明的。只有追求完全推倒重来，整个国家才真正有重建的希望，或许只有做到这种地步逆境才会转化为顺境，一个全新的，与旧有历史一刀两断的新中国才能以一个受尊敬国家的身份出现在世界舞台上。

对于海外的华人华侨以及台湾同胞，我真的很希望他们能够拥有清醒的头脑以做出准确的判断。我必须承认中国人的确热爱自己的故乡，哪怕被欺骗和伤害了那么多次，总有无数的华人听信魔鬼的语言落入陷阱中。我现在既然已经知道中国的往昔，也明白没有人能够有任何正义的理由去要求海外的华人华侨热爱中国文化。他们早就应该做出这样的决定，是放弃作为中国人的特征完全融入本地社会，还是坚定地保有作为中国人的特征生活下去。第一种选择无可指摘，人们生来就拥有在不危害他人的前提下追求理想生活的权利。如果真的要做出第二种选择，我认为他们必须有犹太人当年的坚韧，就当作自己已经没有祖国了，中国人也要过长达两千年的流浪生活。如此毫不动摇地坚持中国的语言、民间信仰和生活习俗，不要问已经过了多少岁月，直到等来天下光复的一日。这样的事业如果真的能够成功，那么中国人的传奇故事将足以与犹太人相媲美。唯一害怕的就是他们既不愿意完全放弃中国人的特征，又对于中国始终抱有不切实际的幻想，这只会伤害他们自己和家庭。

如果天下能够恢复正道，那么我认为台湾，韩国，日本和美国是最需要引以为鉴的。台湾人的确了不起，现在他们与我们已经是截然不同的两种文明了，台湾作为发达地区的社会形态一定是值得中国参考的。在退往台湾的几十年间，国民党究竟做对了什么事能够打破复辟官僚制度的魔咒？土地改革具体是怎么进行的，民主化又是怎么开始的？台湾走向成功的经验对于中国具有不可替代的价值。

朝鲜曾经受中国的影响走上了复辟官僚国家的道路，整个半岛的惨状与清代社会无异。自南北分裂之后，韩国从不利的地缘形势转化成了一系列有利条件，它不得不在美国主导的国际体系中扮演一个比较重要的角色，因而在经济上收获了许多便利并且在政治制度和意识形态上更接近西方世界。去年年底的时候韩国总统尹锡悦试图利用军队发起“宪法政变”，军队和人民做出了迅速和坚定地回绝，这是很了不起的事情，至少表明韩国人知道自己应该保卫什么样的生活。在复辟官僚制度长期存在的前提下，什么样的内外因素让韩国成为发达国家？这是中国所需要的答案。

日本就是我理想中中国正常封建化应该有的样子，日本曾经从中国学来了多少知识和文化，并且把它们发扬光大了。我一点也不认为这有什么不合适，中国的文化在复辟官僚社会不是变得畸形就是走向消亡，现在被一个历史阶段更先进的国家所传承是一件幸运的事情。日本对中国有过非常残暴的侵略，我认为日本人也应该认识到法西斯统治时期的侵略战争对于他们来说也是一段不光彩的歧路。日本在离欧洲万里之遥的列岛上取得了这样迅速和成功的社会发展，他们更应该有勇气，有自信，从容地承认自己的错误。这个国家毫无疑问是伟大的，在我看来世界上如果没有日本，那么人类社会就缺少了最重要的两组对照组，即中日和日欧，很多真理就真的淹没在谬论当中了。中国人应该能够从日本的历史和现实中梳理出自己究竟差在哪里，究竟有什么课落下了，没有哪个国家能像日本一样清楚地告诉中国答案。

美国在过去 80 年里都是无可争议的世界第一强国和领袖，在可以预见的未来依然会如此，这不是说美国自身不会衰落，而是能够取代美国的国家目前还没有出现。在我看来美国当然不需要把中国视为一个挑战其领导地位的威胁，但是这不代表中国对于美国没有价值。事实是，中国拥有的价值可能比美国人过去想得还要大。在冷战之后的 30 余年间，美国人试图推广其政治体制和意识形态却又四处碰壁，原因正像我之前所指出的，世界上每一个地方都有自己独特的社会历史进程，这件事很难因为披了一个现代化的外皮而改变。诚然整个世界都普遍因为美国主导的世界体系受益，但是似乎除了韩国以外，没有哪个国家摆脱了其既定的命运。也就是说没有一个未完整经历封建化进程和近世社会的国家成为发达国家，其社会依然不是真正的现代社会。

过去美国人并不知道针对病症开药方，但是现在中国的病症已经很清晰了，那么有没有更进一步的可能呢？虽然中国距离现代化还很遥远，可任何事业都必须是一步一步完成的。医学工作者面对一个疾病，也总是要先知道他的病理，然后才能想办法去治疗和预防。现在我们已经摸清了这个疾病是怎么形成的，并且知道它会以什么方式造成危害，那么这就距离治病这个目标向前进了一大步。如果美国真的愿意关注中国并且帮助中国走出绝境的话，那么这将是古往今来任何一个政权都从来没有取得过的荣誉，开天辟地所未有的伟业。过去中国人说“扁鹊不能白骨肉，箕子不能存危国”，现在这句话也要改了，因为不但危国可存，甚至一个死去的国家也可以被救活。如果说过去美国人说自己“天命昭昭”还只是向其他国家证明天命在自己这里，那么现在美国人甚至可以自豪地说自己已经能够“制天命而用”，这将开辟一个新的时代。美国不但能够在东亚获得一个强大的忠实的盟友，而且其领导权不知又能持续多少个代人。假如美国真的认为自己应当作为世界的领袖，那么它就必须作为人类的先锋展现出不畏任何困难的勇气。就如同肯尼迪总统当年决定登月时所做出的讲话：我们选择登月不是因为它容易，而是因为它困难重重。

这些天，在我把记录写到结尾的日子里，有两首 86 年新加坡所拍的历史题材剧《绝代双雄》的配乐在网上比较流行，一首是主题曲《绝代双雄》，另一首是根据南唐后主李煜《破阵子》作为歌词编曲的《山河泪》。我刷到之后也是颇为感触，连着循环播放了好几天。要从我个人本心来说，整个中国历史我最喜欢的就是“宅殷土茫茫”（《诗经 玄鸟》）的上古史，因为读上古史的时候真的是没有任何心理负担，我很清楚那个时候的历史事件对于现在已经几乎没有直接影响了。但是自秦统一之后的历史就完全是另一个感受，我读起来总有一种“最是仓皇辞庙日，教坊犹奏别离歌”的感受，然后只能“叹回首月明中”，实在是江河日下，怎能不令人哀痛。无论是过去还是现在，不知道多少人为这个国家流下眼泪，不知道多少人的心血付诸东流。全世界的很多文化里都把祖国比作母亲，如果一个人不知道自己的至亲身患不治之症也就罢了。倘若他了解亲人染病的来龙去脉，深知古往今来得此病者无有生还之机会，却又没有办法医治，心情该是多么悲伤啊！读者如果能对我的泣血之情体察一二，或许能够稍加原谅我在行文时所表露出的情绪。可即使整个国家看起来已经没有希望，我也不会放弃期待着天下光复正道的时候，因为根据我对于人类历史的了解，人类虽然有时变得又傻又糊涂，但我们出现在这个世界上就是来创造奇迹的。

我本人的生活在过去十年里并不幸福，或许人们会嘲笑一个学生考虑这么多问题实在是毫无意义，但是这样的思考对我来说也是生活的支柱。当我思考能有所得的时候，我才能感受到自己的生命是有意義的，即使常常被父母贬低，也始终有活下去的理由。在研究和写作过程中的困难之前已经说过多次了，无论如何，任何错误都由我本人负责，请读到的人尽管用事实和科学方法批判。这份记录不是一本书，在写作的时候也没有被我视为学术作品，所有对本记录具有重大价值的历史文献和学术作品均已经在原文各处直接说明，因此没有专门的参考书目。再次感谢数年来一直陪伴我的各位朋友。写完这份记录的时间是北京时间公元 2025 年 3 月 16 日 23 点 33 分。